MAY APPOINT LIQUOR TAX REFEREES.

Appellate Division Hands Down Decision in Williams License Case.

A decision denying the power of the legislature to prevent the appointment of referees in liquor tax cases was handed down in the Appellate Division yesterday. The case under consideration was the petition of John P. nelic; Signor Caruso's singing thrilling. And the Williams, who opposed the appointment of a referee to adjudicate the question as to whether he was legally entitled to hold liquor tax amance by sales of the opera public plainly has certificate No. 5674. Judson Lawson brought action before the court some time ago to have the certificae annulled on the grounds that it was false and that its contents were not filed properly. Williams denied this, and the court decided to appoint a referee. The case then went to the Appellate Division.

The legislatur passed an amendment to the liquor tax laws last winter, leaving out the clause providing for the appointment of referees in settling questions under it. Williams claimed that under the law as it now stands the court cannot appoint referees in such proceedings. Presiding Justice Morgan J. O'Brien, Justice Ingraham and Justice Laughlin are of the opinion that the action of the legislature in leaving out the clause does not prevent the appointment of referees.

In writing the opinion of the court, Justice Ingraham said that he did not think that the omission of the clause specifically permitting the appointing of referees to adjudicate such cases indicates that it was the intention of the legislature to prevent their appointment.

FEARS MASTER'S POWER. NOT A NATIONAL THEATRE

National Art Theatre Society Not Satisfied with Conried Scheme.

In view of the recent publication of the plans for the building of a theatre in New-York to be called the Nati mal Theatre, it has been asked in many quarters what position the National Art Theatre Society would assume. The question was taken up at a recent meeting of the board of directors, and the president of the society, was asked to lay before the public a statement of the society's position.

This statement, after outlining afresh the society's plan for a $5,000,000 theatre, dramatic school and library, supported by all classes and endowed by contributions from all classes, and presided over by a director elected by "a representative body," goes on to say:

Finally it (the National Theatre) is to be devoted entirely to the drama in all its proper manifestations. Looking over the bare outlines of the society's alms, it should not be difficult to differentiate them from the plan put forward in the newspapers, as conceived by the director of the Metropolitan Opera House. The enterprise for which it is stated that a site has been purchased and for which thirty gentlemen are to subscribe $100,000 apiece as soon as they are selected as proper box holders by a committee of society ladies, is to take legal form as a private corporation, operating for profit. This feature is not to be quarrelled with where so many theatres are built every year without any pretence of serving artistic or social purposes, but it is not the sign of a national theatre. Finally it (the National Theatre) is to be de purposes, but it is not the sign of a national theatre.

The scheme lacks also the distinctive and necessary feature of a seriously founded and properly housed institute of theatric art on a broad national basis. A more serious point of difference is the announcement that one-third of the representations at the theatre will be comic opera—such light opera as finds itself out of place at the Metropolitan. In the three thousand theatres of the United States the dama furnishes 20 per cent of all the presentations, and surely one such as Mr. Couried outlines should find the drama in its tremendous range sufficing. The National Art Theatre Society's Ideal differs radically from the proposed confusing of comic opera with the classic drama, as unrolated, undignified and inexpedient.

The further repertory of Mr. Conried's theatre reads like an excerpt from the manual of the National Art Theatre Society, and so far it is excellent, but one misses in it anything which at all personal that the state of the word "national" in its title. No collection of European classics in the repertory will entitle it to that designation. The holding open of its stage doors to foreign actors, however good, is not the way of proving its title to the word "national." A frosty and occasional welcome to the American playwright seems the only trace of concession to the term.

No one will deny Mr. Conried's ability as a manager, for does he not already direct the German Theatre and the Metropolitan Opera House? And why not a third enterprise of like character for like ends? His ability and his good faith are not questioned, but to be "national," to be uncommercial in aim and effect, it must be the question of a basic principle and a policy above personality. In closing this partial disclosure of the likeness and the difference I would like to add that the National Art Theatre Society welcomes this evidence that its spirit is abroad. It would not publish anything to deter or impede an effort toward building a playhouse which offers some prospe

Daniel E. Bandmann came to this country from Germany-where he was born in Hesse Cassel in 1840-early in life, but had already been seen on the stage of the Court Theatre at Strelitz. In this city he appeared as an amateur at the old Turn Halle in the Bowery, and soon became connected with a stock company there. He played for three years in German and then essayed English. At the age of twenty-one he appeared in the part of Shylock at Niblo's Garden and achieved a success that fixed his future career. He married Miss Alice Henshall and they went to England, where Mr. Bandmann appeared as Narcisse in Lord Lytton's play, "The Rightful Heir," and as Othello in The following year he returned to this country at the head of a company organized by Ion rdicaris, who last year was captured by brigands in Morocco. Bandmann and his company appeared in the old Standard Theatre and he played Narcisse, Othello and Hamlet. In his company was a young Englishman named Herbert Blythe, afterward better known as Maurice Barrymore and Miss Millicent Palmer, whom Bandmann subsequently married. They lived together until and made many tours, playing principally Shakespearean parts. The second Mrs. Eandmann returned to England twenty years ago and still lives there. About eighteen years ago Mr. Bandmann made a melodramatic play of Stevenson's, "Dr. Jekyil and Mr. Hyde," which he produced on many circuits. He was the author of other plays, among them being "The Cross and the Crescent" and "Madeline Morel," In 1896 Mr. Bandmann purchased a ranch in the Bitter Root country in Montana and retired from the stage, save for a short period a few years ago, when he appeared in vaudeville performances in an act from "The Merchant of Venice" and other Shakespearean plays. WORLD'S FAIR IN BRONX

Tercentenary Committee Hear Plan for Hudson Celebration.

A world's fair, to be held in The Bronx, may be decided on as the proper form of celebrating the discovery of the Hudson River by Hendrik the joint committee at its first business meeting held yesterday afternoon in the Governor's Room at the City Hall by Richard G. Hollaman, of Brook ments for the erection of a tablet, of a monun and of a bridge. All of these met with small favor. Mr. Homaman then arose and said that he considered it ridiculous to think that the Governor and the Mayor had appointed so important a committee merely to put up a tablet or a monu-

Mr. Hollaman then proposed that the open land in The Bronx be utilized as a fair ground, and that the committee prepare plans for an exposition worthy of the financial centre of the United States. Many members favored his proposals, and the committee resolved to have the arguments printed and presented for further consideration at the next meeting.

The committee on permanent organization, plan and scope appointed last week presented the following permanent officers: President, Stewart L. Woodford; vice-presidents, Robert B. Roosevelt, Levi P. Morton Andrew Carnegie, Andrew D. Jesup, William Rockefeller, Brigadier General Frederick D. Grant, U. S. A.; William B. Van Rensselaer; treasurer, J. P. Morgan & Co. PERMANENT EXPOSITION.

Movement to Commemorate Tercentenary of Discovery of Hudson. Carnegie Lyceum was filled last night with citizens summoned to consider the establishment of a permanent international exposition in this city. to celebrate the tercentenary of the discovery of the Hudson River, which takes place in 1969. Resolutions were passed declaring this the sense of the meeting and authorizing the appointment of a committee of fifteen by the chairman of the meeting, John R. Van Wormer, to formulate gen eral plans for such an undertaking and to bring the scheme before the joint committee appointed by the Governor and Mayor to arrange for some kind of celebration of the anniversary.

After speeches by Dr. J. M. Harland, George N. Kingsbury and E. Parmly Brown, D. A. Reynmoved the following resolutions, which were car ried enthusiastically:

Whereas a joint committee has been appointed by the Governor of the State and the Mayor of the City of New-York to consider and prepare plans for the celebration of the tercentenary of the dis-covery of the Hudson, which will take place in the year 1909;

for the celebration of the tercentenary of the discovery of the Hudson, which will take place in the year 1909;

And whereas, the historical, commercial and political importance of the event justify its recognition on a large and impressive scale;

Resolved, that it is the sense of this meeting that the present celebration should take the form of a permanent international exposition, to be opened in 1909 and to continue annually thereafter—not a mere ephemeral "World's Fair" which cannot possibly be expected to pay the cost of its construction, but a permanent and significant enterprise which shall offer such a panoramic registry of the world's progress in all directions as to make it the object of continual pligrimage from all parts of the world and a perpetual stimulus to inventors, discoverers, scientific research and all industrial, economic, intellectual and moral progress.

Resolved further, that an executive committee of fifteen be appointed by the chairman of this body, which committee shall investigate the idea above outlined, formulate a general plan for its execution, and bring the same through proper channels to the attention of the joint committee adoption of such plan by the joint committee referred to.

Resolved further, that the executive committee, when appointed, be authorized to have this body incorporated under an appropriate title, and that when this meeting adjourns it do so adjourn subject to the call of the chairman.

TO ADMIT HOMOEOPATHS.

Medical Society of Kings May Soon Take a Radical Step.

That all reputable medical practitioners of Brooklyn may be brought into closer affiliation, a resolu-tion has been formulated by members of the Med-ical Society of the County of Kings looking to the admission of others than those connected with the so-called regular or allopathic school. It raises the advisability of admitting to membership graduates of eclectic and homocopathic schools who renounce publicly the practice of sectarian medicine,

Judging from the attitude of certain of the leading members of the society the question, which is to be discussed at the next meeting, on December 21, will be answered in the affirmative.

"The renunciation of sectarian medicine," said Dr. James W. Fleming, president of the society, "does not mean to my mind the heroic conversion from any creed or theory, but the mere acknowledgment of the truth that all successful practitioners must employ substantially the same methods in the treatment of recognized diseases."

ods in the treatment of recognized diseases."
"The practice of medicine is too serious a matter for childish bickerings." said Dr. Henry A. Fairbairn, one of the trustees of the society. "Our board of censors will see to it that any man admitted to the society shall be morally and medically fit."

Speaking as a representative of the homosopathists in Brooklyn, Dr. J. Lester Keep, of No. 469 Clintonave. said:

"Homosopathy has made great advances since the school was founded by Dr. Hahnemann, but the fundamental theory of the use of specific drugs for specific diseases remains the creed of practice today. If membership in the Medical Society of the County of Kings, or any other society, involves the public renunciation of the principle. I think the homeopathists will have to get along without the society."
